Opioid Addiction During the Coronavirus Pandemic

What does one do when an epidemic and a pandemic intersect?

People who suffer from opioid use disorder do not fare well when there is a loss of routine, when they are socially isolated, and when they are suffering from economic loss with potential food instability.

Too much time, is not a friend to someone in recovery. Let's face it, most of us don't do well under these circumstances.

Heightened anxiety is a trigger for drug use and isolation is often a trademark of opioid addiction. The coronavirus pandemic has created a situation where there is both. Without in person counseling and support meetings, substance abusers are more likely to relapse. Although advances in telemedicine services and relaxed restrictions on buprenorphine prescribing can help a person with opioid use disorder, this is a risky time.

Please know that help is available in Steuben County, N.Y.
